SPATIAL JUSTICE

Raumpioniere – an agency for urban makers

Urban projects are often complicated to implement, especially for smaller organisations and freelancers. It takes special knowledge and experience to be able to work together with the authorities and various stakeholders.

In the film, Jan Gartner, the founder of Raumpioniere, talks about the concept, the role of equity in cities and how we should rethink the way we deal with urban space.

The Creative Cluster

In the middle of Vienna Creative Cluster is located, a non-profit organization, that has temporarily transformed a former school building into a center for culture since 2019: Creative Cluster Magareten. The former school provides affordable workspace for 140 freelance artists of all disciplines.

In the following film, we talked to the founders and various freelancers who give us a better insight into the organization, challenges and the everyday life in one of the biggest creative breeding grounds in Vienna.

Manifesto

How can we reactivate the vacancy in our cities? Manifesto, a gallery based in Bosnia, had to deal with these questions themselves in their search for a new space for their gallery. A gallery who made theme self the goal to provide space, opportunities and assistance in the production, presentation and validation of contemporary art and by doing so using art as a tool to initiate dialogue on social and political issues.

In the video, the team talks about difficulties in the process of finding and renovating the space, about crowdfunding and helps us by this to better understand how the processes of activating vacancy can work.
